HONOLULU IN THE PLUMBERS' CLUTCH

An Illegal Combine Holds Up the Houseowners.

SUPPLY HOUSES AND EMPLOYERS IN COLLUSION WITH ONE ANOTHER

Extortionate Prices are Charged for all Jobs and Non-Members of the Trust are Refused Material to Work With.

ARE THE plumbers of Honolulu playing a "stand and deliver" game on the people?

Householders, builders and the public in general say they are.

Never have prices for plumbing work been so high. With no duty on material and with three times as many workmen here as a year or two ago, it costs more than ever for the smallest or largest job.

An investigation proves that the plumbers are in a conspiracy to keep up the prices, and that the house owner is the victim of a gigantic and illegal trust whose ramifications extend to every part of the United States, and whose power is sought to be absolute.

In every plumbing job four parties are interested—the house owner, the master plumber or boss of the establishment which accepts the job or undertakes the contract, the journeyman plumber or man or men who do the actual work, and the firm which supplies to the master plumber the material used.

The latter three—the master plumber, the workmen and the sellers of material—are joined to empty the purse of the house owner.

Not that the three are working in harmony with one another, for they are fighting like cats and dogs, but on the subject of milking the unfortunate customer they are as united as the Siamese twins.

On June 14 when Hawaii became a Territory of the United States the plumbing octopus took possession of Honolulu.

Before then the plumbers bought their supplies where they pleased in the United States or elsewhere, and competition kept prices down to a fairly honest level.

When Territorialization came the plumbing trust of the United States put down its foot. There the trust absorbs most of the manufacturers, the plumbing houses, and the workmen. They are almost all subscribers to an iron-clad contract that binds them to do business with none outside the trust under pain of boycott.

Knowing beforehand that the trust would extend its slimy tentacles to Hawaii, one of the master plumbers here laid in $50,000 worth of materials, preferring to pay the interest on such a great stock of lumber to stand the terrific figures of the trust supply houses. But the customer gets no advantage.

When the plague scared people into sanitation, and the Board of Health recognized the need of a clearing up, with the prospects of the sewer system being finished and connections with it becoming necessary, plumbing regulations were passed which put the city into the hands of the thriving ring body.

There were then about five master plumber houses here; that is, five houses which employed journeyman plumbers and took contracts. These five employers did all the business, and though making fortunes, were able to handle all that came their way. They bought from the cheapest sellers at export prices in the United States, and with the prospect of the enforcement of the plumbing regulations looked for a rich harvest.

Now there are about fifteen employing plumbers. The graft was too good for five, and three times as many are dividing it. The only plumbing contractors who were reasonably cheap were Orientals, and a plan was immediately organized to freeze them out and thus get the house owner by the throat.

The American system of "skin the public" was put in force, and the three supply houses here put on the screws. They refused to sell any piece of plumbing material to anyone but a master plumber.

An outsider, a house owner or working mechanic, cannot buy a washer or spigot. The veriest trifle in the plumbing line can be bought only by the employing plumber, a member of the conspiracy to defraud the helpless people.

The journeyman plumber, the workman, though with the usual different interest from the employer, yet is bound in the scheme to hold up the public and does his share.

Today there are three supply houses, fifteen employing plumbers and two or three score working plumbers in Honolulu.

The employers pay their full-fledged journeymen $5 a day. The men want more, and a demand for $6 a day has been made. The employers say they will refuse. They assert that they will close down rather than pay $6 a day.

But the working plumbers laugh at this. They know that their bosses charge the poor devil of a house owner $10 or $20 a day for the time of the employee, and have the public on the hip.

If the man who has a pipe to fix or a leak to stop wants a bit of solder, or a spigot, or anything else, he cannot get it.

This is a ridiculous, but it is true. Go today to any of the three firms in Honolulu which keep on hand plumbing materials and ask for a washer, petition for a section of pipe, or inquire the boon of a spigot.

You will not get any of them. They will tell you they haven't them on hand, or will come out flat-footed and say they won't sell them—that you must hire a plumber.

Here is what a prominent Honolulu has written about his attempt to obtain material:

"A representative of an important concern called at one of the large hardware establishments yesterday for the purpose of purchasing some pipe necessary for use in the preliminary plumbing work in their new building, now in course of construction. He was politely advised that he could purchase no supplies of that nature unless he was a member of the Master Plumbers' Association. As he was in a position to obtain what he wanted from other sources, of which he at once availed himself, it caused him no inconvenience. Skilled men were at work on this job, more competent than the large majority of plumbers, to do a first-class job, but carrying out the principle of the association, these men would be obliged to stand around while the association employees did the work at ten times the cost."

If ever there was a barefaced robbery, an unlawful and dishonest advantage taken of the individual it is in this nefarious banding together of the plumbers.

But the remedy is in the people's hands. A well known Honolulu jobber, who is thoroughly familiar with the plumbing business, says that in San Francisco there are two houses, and in the whole United States many others who have kept outside the rapacious ring, and that he will send at once for a supply of materials, and will sell them to all comers.

He will dispatch an order by the next steamer, and will announce in a few days his ability to fill all orders here. The Board of Health will rescind the plumbing regulations; the courts may be asked to declare illegal the trust, and the people may be depended upon to do the rest.

The plumbing trust must go.

HOUSES TO BE NUMBERED NOW

Work Will Begin at Once and Free Delivery System Will Follow.

Postoffice Inspector Robinson announces that the free delivery system is in a fair way to become established but that the first requirement resting with the residents is that their houses should be numbered. Mr. Robinson has been informed by Mr. Stevenson who has the contract for furnishing house numbers that he has a sufficient number to commence his work and that by the next steamship he will receive enough to number the entire city.

Mr. Stevenson will commence numbering from house to house on Monday next. He has a regular system for performing this work according to the plans sketched out by Postoffice Inspector Flint and Louis Kenake. The maps now in Mr. Stevenson's possession show that the City will be numbered as the large cities on the Mainland have been. The first block on either side of Nuanu street will be numbered 1 to 100. The second block from 100 to 200 and so on. If the numbers run only to 40 in some of the blocks the next block will commence at the even hundred number. King street will also be a dividing line in the numbering.

Mr. Robinson states that the importance of making known the intention to number the streets at present is to have the residents fall in line with the policy of the postoffice department. By assisting Mr. Stevenson to the extent of having numbers placed on their houses they are assisting the postoffice department and the sooner the entire City is numbered, the sooner will come the free delivery system.

On the strength of Mr. Stevenson's statement that the numbering commences next Monday, Inspector Robinson will forward an application by the Gaelic today to the Postoffice Department, Washington, to have matters so shaped that the carrier system can be put into force without much delay.

IMPORTS BLOODED STOCK.

Sam Parker Brings Valuable Animals From Coast.

Sam Parker imported by the Rhoderick Dhu on her last trip from San Francisco blooded stock for his ranch at Mana, Kona, Hawaii, valued at over $5,000 and he will engage extensively in the breeding of fine horses and cows.

In the consignment were forty-one bulls, fourteen heifers, one stallion and one jack. All of the animals arrived in good condition under the care of F. W. Carter. The bulls imported were Durham and Hereford stock and the stallion a Norman. Mr. Parker hopes to breed a heavier class of horses at his ranch for draught purposes.
